ken, New Jersey, a few nights ago on the Dangers of the Republic. He selected several heads for his discourse, including reconstruction, the one man power, the veto power, the two term power, the Vice Presidency, and the pardoning power. He said the commanding thought of the hour is reconstruction. He was in favor of reconstruction not only of the Senate, but for the more radical reconstruction of the whole Government. He added: "I am for the abolition of the Vice Presidency. There is no need of any extra, ready-

Daily he mounts the ramparts, daily he makes the olrcuit of the immense fortification so long his prison, daily he gathers what he may of invigoration from the bracing healthful air surging up from the ocean between the Virginia capes, but daily his life seems slipping rapidly from his grasp. He has no positive disease, he is not even fretted by any galling prison restrictions; he seems at ease, has no complaints to make about his treatment, and yet his strength appears to wane; his natural force day by day to be abated, but those most familiar with him now seem to think that he will last as long within the fort as out of it, perhaps longer. The great four years' strain upon his energies, and the downfall of his empire, sapped the foundations of his lite; after that it mattered little how or where he lived. I may add that he has grown simply indifferent as to the future; he does not expect liberty and never speaks of it now; he does not hope for a trial in the spring, but presumes that the trial will be discussed and hinted at as the excuse for keeping him where he is." almost run out. The price of tickets from Mansfield to Crestline, on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Raliroad, is half a dollar, when purchased at the station; but the company order the collection of eighty-five cents when the fair is paid on the cars. Some time ago a Major Hauk forgot to buy a ticket, and at first refused to pay the extra thirty/nve cents; so the cars were stopped, and he was put off, although at the last moment he offered to pay the full demand. The Major walked four miles to the next station, and has obtained a verdict of $400 against the company—a very liberal compensation for the consumption of boot leather involved.

Ax editor of an exchange paper, published not long since some verses, containg these lines:

Ohio Biver Navigation.

From the Pittsburgh Commercial.

We published yesterday an article re-Canal" around the Falls of the Ohio, which shows the financial dead-lock at present existing in connection with that important work. The general public importance of an improved means of passing the most difficult available for his purposes. He falls on the Ohio river can scarcely be Inis interior avenue of trade. We have it from reliable-pathority, that the old locks at Louisville, which have been in use nearly forty years, are greatly dispidated, besides being entirely inadequate in their dimensions to accommodate the present wants of the river commerce, and that with the best exertions it will take between one and two years to complete the rock excavation and other works of the new capation.

and other, works of the new canal. masonry of the magnificent new lo argetemough to chamber a vessel 350 eet long and 80 feet wide, are complet ed but much other work, it seems, reed but much other work, it seems, remains to be done. The people of Louisville certainly deserve great credit for what they have thus far accomplished, especially when it is considered that the work was carried on in the midst of the war. They should call on Hercules now, and Hercules should come to the the war. They should call on Hercules in low, and Hercules should come to the rescue. It is precisely what ought to be a labor of love with the Government, as we may question whether there is another point in the United States where the expenditure of a million of dollars will result in greater public benefit. No one can tell the day or hour when the old canal works may become utterly impassable, and the whole trade of the Ohio river for a large portion of the year be subjected to an absolute portage at Louisville. It is already so, practically, for a large amount of business. The Government, after the lapse of twenty-two years, has resumed active charge of the Ohio river, and re-commenced the work of restoring and improving its navigation.

The removal of the numerous obstructions now in and near its channels, in the shape of anags, logs, wrecks of boats.

The removal of the numerous obstructions now in and near its channels, in the shape of snags, logs, wreeks of boats, &c., will, we understand, be commenced as soon as the season will permit. Also, the completion of a number of the partly built wing dams for concentrating the water, the work upon which ceased in 1844, and other improvements of the mavigation. All this is well. Every improvement of this river is desirable, and we hope the Government finving taken the matter in hand, will not cease its operations till we have the most perfect navigation of which it is susceptible. But the necessity for immediate action in regard to the falls at Louisville is undeniable. Notwithstanding the large amount of business accommodated by the various railroads, there is an enormous trade dependent upon the river, in which more than half the population of the United States is more or less directly interested. It is true that no one city has a deeper stake in this matter than Pittsburgh. It is, however, by no means local in its bearings, but, on the contrary, eminently national. We are glad that the public attention is turning in this direction, and we shall take pleasure in publishing any matters of interest relating to this subject.

WHEELING, WEST VA., SATURDAY, MORNING DECEMBER 22, 1866. Henry J. Raymond, Editor of the New York Times, and Member of Con-gress—A Sharp and Discriminating Critique.

From the Louisville Journal Intellectually, Mr. Raymond, of the New York Times, is a very able man. He has a large store of knowledge, accumulated by great industry and rearch, and he possesses the power gest it and to make it at all tim he utters them are clear, direct, and strong. He has few equals in the nation. In Congress he certainly has no superior. He has capabilities that should render him one of the masterspirits of the country.

But, unquestionably, Mr. Raymond has fallen far short of the destiny that he might by a receive father.

he might, by a proper use of his power have achieved. He lacks some junt have achieved. He lacks some important element—either judgment, or firmness, or principle, or all three. He is aspiring, and no doubt impatient for the success of his aspirations. Not winning by one policy, he doesn't persevere, but makes unseemly haste to adopt another and then perhaps betakes himself to a third or goes back to the first. It may be that he is constitutionally unstable, meaning no more by his changes than the moon, the winds, the waves, and the clouds by theirs. But at any rate he has by his vacillations forfeited public confidence. His counsels, however imposingly urged, fail to have even their just influence from the very fact that it is he who urges them. His late pendulous vibrations between conservatism and radicalism have made him, in spite of his great mental accomplishments, the jest

It was an evil day for Mr. Raymond when he went to Congress. Instead of standing proudly up in the House of Representatives, as he might have done, one of the very tallest of its spirits, he exercises little or no influence in that body. Even the radical ence in that body. Even the radical members, with whom he at present cooperates, treats him coldly if not rudely, conscious that they are strong enough without him. The scene in the Republican caucus, when he made his appearance in that assemblage, was such as to cause his friends to feel humitation and shame on his account. There he stood or sat, questioned, catechised, cross-examined, rebuked, sneered at, taunted, insulted, and well nigh turned out of doors by men whom he knew to be incomparably his inferiors, and whom, if his political record had been clear, he could have made cringe before him. But he is yet a young man. Let him prove true to himself in the future; and he can no doubt accomplish all that has been hoped of him.

THE DISTRICT SUFFRAGE BILL. President Johnson has submitted the bill regulating suffrage in this District to his Cabinet, in advance of its reception, and they all sustain him in the tion, and they all sustain him in the opinion that it should be vetoed, except Mr. Stanton, who went to New York—some say—to avoid expressing his views.

To the old residents, who claim descent from the Catholic families of Maryland, or the Cavalier families of Mrgiand, or the Cavalier families of Virginia, the idea of negro suffrage is shocking. A gentleman will have his sable body servant ride side by side with him, or a lady will crowd her Ethiopian nurse into a railroad car, and it is right, for they appear as members of a servile race; but the idea that a colored man worth fifty thousand dollars has as good a right to vote as a drunken, idle, white vagabond, is appalling. The only hope of the once dominant race is, that Congress will now take away their charter, so as to dispense with ballot boxes. THE HOLIDAY PEVER

It was very evident to-day that alpower were being discussed in the Se ate, and the Pacific Railroad and the Appropriation Bill were being discussed in the House, the Congressmen were thinking of the coming Christmas holidays, more than the national business. It is the prevalent impression that Nebraska will be admitted, without the condition that the word white is to be stricken from the Constitution, but Mr. Sumner will contest the rout to the Sumner will contest the point to the last extremity.

The proposed Congressional excursion to New Orleans does not as yet meet with general favor, as gentlemen feel that they would place themselves in a false position by indirectly seek-ing the hospitalities of the municipal authorities of the Crescent City just now.
